They Plan to Teach

Fellowships Go To Four At UA

Four students from the University of Arizona have won fellowships given to undergraduates who plan a college teaching career.

They are Charles C. Bowden and Kirk T. McDonald, both of Tucson; Geoffrey A. Clark, Southampton, Pa., and Peter C. Viviano, Catskill, N.Y.

McDonald, son of UA cloud physicist Dr. James E. McDonald, is studying physics. Bowden and Viviano received their fellowships in history and Clark is a student of anthropology.

There were 1,408 students from 380 schools chosen for the fellowships this year on a competitive basis.

The fellowships pay tuition,

$2,000 and allowances for dependents.

Receiving honorable mention at the University of Arizona were Nancy D. Cozad, Morgantown, W. Va., a geology student, and David P. Libbey, Branford, Conn., an anthropology student.
